Implementation of Text Message Appointment Reminder System to Reduce Missed Healthcare Appointment at Outpatient Clinic Georgette M. Ebu, 2017 Background: Missed appointments at outpatient clinics are a significant problem inherent in local and regional healthcare systems in the United States, as well as globally. The outcome is costly to organizations and burdensome on organizational productivity, the healthcare system, and poor patient outcomes. The use of text message appointment reminders potentially offers a cost-effective and time-efficient strategy to decrease missed appointments, thus, improving the efficiency of outpatient healthcare delivery. Evidence-Based Framework: The organization change at the outpatient community clinic was to implement the use of a text messaging appointment reminder system in an attempt to reduce missed appointment rate. The Health Belief Model and the IOWA Model were used as theory and evidence-based practice model respectively for the development of the project. Method: The objectives of the project were: (1) to implement a text message reminder system to reduce missed appointments; (2) to maintain the standard practice of patient reminders using telephone calls; (3) and to reduce lost revenue from missed appointments. The goal of the project was to reduce the number of missed appointments at the outpatient community clinic. Evaluation was accomplished through comparing missed appointment rate during the text message implementation period with the missed appointment rate during the same period in the previous year. Data was collected using a self-developed data collection tool. The results of the project will be used to demonstrate the impact text messaging has on appointment attendance. Recent literature has provided evidence that text message reminders to patient care are effective in reducing missed appointment rate in outpatient clinics. Findings: The implementation of text messages to remind patients of their healthcare appointment reduced missed appointments to 1.94%, compared to 19.12% during the same time period in the previous year when text messaging was not used. Conclusions/Recommendations: Based on the findings of this quality improvement project, use of a text messaging reminder system is suggested in outpatient settings. Recommendations include: the clinic should consider the use of an automated text message system to help reduce staff workload, burnout and reduce human errors. Areas for future study: extend study to verify the impact of text message reminder system on missed appointments for a longer period of time, compare different populations and missed appointments, financial benefits and costs to the clinic and to the patient. An additional recommendation would be to focus on patient satisfaction rates.

New Directions in Behavioral Intervention Development for Pediatric Obesity, An Issue of Pediatric Clinics of North America, E-Book Sylvie Naar-King, 2016-07-06 Almost one out of every three US children is overweight or obese, with minority youth at highest risk. There are limited efficacious pediatric obesity interventions available for clinicians, and successful weight loss trials for minority youth are rare. Even fewer interventions have been shown to significantly improve clinical health outcomes such as adiposity, blood pressure, and cholesterol level, and maintenance of behavior change over the long-term remains a challenge. Translation of research in which bench findings are applied to the bedside is uncommon in the behavioral arena. Thus, advances in our understanding of fundamental human processes such as motivation, emotion, cognition, self-regulation, decision-making, stress, and social networks are not being optimally applied to our most pressing behavioral health problems. This issue of Pediatric Clinics will focus on promising behavioral treatments in the pipeline that have been translated from basic behavioral science and are the process of refinement and proof of concept testing.

Health Communication and Mass Media Rukhsana Ahmed, Benjamin R. Bates, 2016-04-22 Health Communication and Mass Media is a much-needed resource for those with a professional or academic interest in the field of health communication. The chapters engage and expand upon significant theories informing efforts at mediated health communication and demonstrate the practical utility of these theories in on-going or completed projects. They consider how to balance the ethical and efficacy demands of mediated health communication efforts, and discuss both traditional media and communication systems and new web-based and mobile media. The book's treatment is broad, reflecting the topical and methodological diversity in the field. It offers an integrated approach to communication theory and application. Readers will be able to appreciate the ways that theory shapes health communication applications and how those applications inform the further construction of theory. They will find practical examples of mediated health communication that can serve as models for their own efforts. While the book serves as an introduction to mediated health communication for students, professionals, and practitioners with limited experience, researchers and advanced practitioners will also appreciate the exemplars and theoretical insights offered by the chapter authors. This book will be of interest to anyone involved in health communication programs or more generally with communication and allied studies, as well as to those in the health professions and their related fields.

Telephone Counselling Maxine Rosenfield, 2013-05-01 The use of the telephone as a tool for counselling is increasingly appealing, providing clients with a service that combines accessibility and convenience. But how can practitioners ensure the same quality of support as in their face-to-face counselling? And how can they adapt to the different demands and restrictions of counselling by telephone? This comprehensive guide: - Supports the reader step by step in setting up their own practice, including vital tools such as confidentiality and payment agreements - Considers different approaches that can be used over the telephone, such as humanistic and cognitive behavioural techniques - Provides engaging case studies to illustrate the distinctive character of telephone counselling and offer practical guidance This book is the perfect introduction to counselling by telephone for students and trainees on counselling and psychotherapy courses, and is an essential guide for practitioners looking to develop skills in the area. Maxine Rosenfield has over twenty years experience working as a counsellor, supervisor and coach. She is a past President of Helplines Australia and of the Counsellors and Psychotherapists Association of NSW. She is currently a counsellor, trainer and consultant in private practice and is the Vice President of the Australasian Association for Supervision.
