Stumped K. A. Shows,2021-06 Fifteen-year-old Walter Stypes did not approve of his parents decision to move to a small town in rural Alabama. Nor did he approve of his father's unjust decision to make Walter dig up an old stump in the backyard of their newly purchased historic home. Admittedly yes, Walter had begged for years to have a private bathroom separate from the unnecessaries, his three younger siblings, but having to clear a stump to make way for extensive house renovations was taking matters a bit too far.After all, it was Wade, the town bully, who had thrown the first book in the library. Walter had only acted in self-defense. Kenny, the creative and pretty girl who sat in front of Water in English, was his eye witness. But it was Woody, the stuttering oversized man/boy Walter had secretly recruited to be his personal bodyguard, who actually found the secret. The buried secret that would lead the unlikely trio on a quest to dig up the truth about an old town legend regarding a haunted tree in the cemetery.Stumped is a redemptive, yet humorous, coming-of-age story that champions the pursuit of goodness, truth, and beauty. Readers of all ages will treasure this heartwarming story about family, courage, and the meaning of friendship.

Although decisions depend on a large number of different factors, which make them very complex, this paper also aims to give an impression about how decision-making affects people's ability to approach and solve stumpers. As problem solving takes place in many different areas of human life, different human cognitive activities are activated in order to approach specific problems. In the case of stumpers, the problems that are to be solved, address different ways of information acquisition and processing. While some people are able to implement the given information correctly and form the right result, some struggle to form a result that actually solves the problem or to form a result at all. At first, the case of stumpers is approached in this paper by stating the definition of terms. In the further course, a distinction between the various types of stumpers is made, followed by an explanation of how stumpers work and how they manage to lead people astray. To do so, four different stumpers of two various types will be analyzed regarding the way they work and the foundation they are built on. Each stumper will predominantly be analyzed based on the most outstanding reason why some people fail to solve these specific stumpers. To test and prove the proposed reasons, the results of a questionnaire will also be analyzed and used. The results of the investigation will then be summarized in a conclusion.
