Narratives and the Policy Process Michael D. Jones,Mark K. McBeth,Elizabeth A. Shanahan,2022 A long history of literature describes how stories are central to how humans understand and communicate about the world around them. The NPF applies these discoveries to the policy process, whereby narratives are meaning-making tools used to capture attention and influence policy outcomes. Conceived at the Portneuf School of Narrative in the early part of the century and formally named in 2010, the Narrative Policy Framework's (NPF) initial purpose was to scientifically understand the relationship between narratives and the policy process. Since its seminal naming, the NPF's charter has expanded to non-scientific approaches (Gray & Jones, 2015; Jones and Radaelli, 2015), to science and policy communication, as well as proclaiming normative commitments to both science and democracy. Recently, guideline publications have also been produced that provide detailed instructions about how to conduct NPF research. Along the way several summary pieces have chronicled the NPF's development. Two of these NPF assessments were part of larger collections of NPF studies, including the 2014 edited volume The Science of Stories and a special NPF symposium issue featured in the Policy Studies Journal. On par with NPF collections emerging every four years, here we offer a third collection of NPF studies that represent some of the best NPF studies to date. --page 1

National Postal Forum U S Government Accountability Office (G,U. S. Government Accountability Office (,2013-06 In response to a congressional request, GAO examined the: (1) relationship between the United States Postal Service (USPS) and the National Postal Forum (NPF); (2) authority for and amount of financial support provided to NPF by USPS; and (3) adequacy of public disclosure and accountability for this financial support. GAO found that: (1) NPF promotes cooperation between USPS and its customers, educates postal customers, and provides for display of postal-related equipment, supplies, and services; (2) NPF serves as an independent sponsor of postal forums that USPS personnel plan, organize, and manage; and (3) the Postal Reorganization Act authorizes USPS to provide these management and administrative services. GAO also found that NPF: (1) is subject to and complies with disclosure and accountability requirements the Internal Revenue Service and the District of Columbia place on tax-exempt organizations; (2) maintains internal accountability by having an independent accounting firm examine its annual financial statements and related records; and (3) should include in its public disclosures the information that it finances forums through registration fees, exhibit booth rentals, and substantial contributions from USPS.
