The Use of Geared Spring Tabs for Elevator Control William H. Phillips,1945 Summary: Equations are presented for the stick force per g in maneuvers obtained with a geared spring tab. A geared spring tab, as defined herein, differs from an ordinary spring tab in that, when the elevator is moved with the stick free at zero airspeed, the tab moves with respect to the elevator in the same manner as a conventional geared, or balancing, tab. The geared spring tab is shown to present the theoretical possibility of obtaining a value of force per g independent of speed regardless of the spring stiffness. If the geared spring tab is used in conjunction with an elevator that has zero variation of hinge moment with angle of attack, the force per g may be made independent of speed at any center-of-gravity location. A suitably designed geared spring tab will provide adequate ground control, small sensitivity of the control forces to slight changes in the elevator hinge-moment parameters, and substantially no variation of stick force per g with speed. The geared spring tab is shown to be most suitable for application to large airplanes.

Use of Variable-ratio Geared Tabs to Improve Stick-force Characteristics in Turning Flight Harold F. Kleckner,1945 Summary: In flight tests of an experimental elevator with geared tabs, a cockpit control over the tab gear ratio was found to be satisfactory for adjusting the stick force per g in turning flight according to the pilot's preference. This type of control appears to have application for increasing the center-of-gravity range for satisfactory stick forces in turning flight. Sample calculations made for a fighter airplane indicated that satisfactory stick forces in turning flight can be obtained for any center-of-gravity position at which the elevator control meets other requirements.

Collection and Analysis of Hinge-moment Data on Control-surface Tabs Paul E. Purser, Charles B. Cook, 1947 Various wind-tunnel data on the hinge-moment characteristics of control-surface tabs have been collected and analyzed. The data, all of which are for plain unbalanced tabs, were obtained from force tests of models in two- and three-dimensional flow and from pressure-distribution measurements on models in two-dimensional flow. Some data that show the effects of Mach number on tab hinge moments for representative conventional and NACA 6-series airfoil sections are presented.
