Genetic Variation of Juniperus Procera Hochst Ex Endl Demissew Sertse, 2010-08 Juniperus procera is the only species among 67 taxa in the genus Juniperus that naturally grows south of equator stretching from Arabian Peninsula to 18°S in Zimbabwe. Ethiopia is assumed to host the largest J. procera populations having high genetic variation owing to its wide ecological amplitude. This study assessed genetic variation of six Ethiopian J. procera populations: Chilimo, Goba, Menagesha-Suba, Wef-Washa, Yabelo and Ziquala by using microsatellite and AFLP markers. Results showed that majority of the variation falls within populations signifying mating system and gene flow mechanisms of the species. Yet, most of the populations were significantly differentiated from each other. Goba and Yabelo scored lower genetic diversity at AFLPs. However, these populations harbored the highest number of private alleles suggesting their unique geographic position and ecological conditions. Comparative and high genetic diversity was computed for Menagesha-Suba and Wef-Washa. These populations were also the only generically undifferentiated pair at AFLPs attesting the oral story that claims wildling from the later planted at the former population back in 15th century.

Detanninification of Albizia Procera Foliage Md. Mizanur Rahman, Bodrun Naher, 2012-07 In situation of scant feed resources tree foliages can be the important source of forages to ruminants but the presence of deleterious compounds such as phenols can affect their utilization. It is found that there are no significant effects of soil types and seasons on DM, OM and CP contents in Albizia procera. Total phenols and total tannins contents is significantly varied between foliages grown in dry and wet seasons. Foliages grown in dry season contained high level of all types of phenols than that of wet season. Amelioration process for detanninification using polyethylene glycol (PEG), Calcium hydroxide [Ca(OH)₂] and Potassium carbonate (K₂CO₃) significantly reduced all types of phenolic compounds. Amelioration process significantly increased in vitro gas production, OMD and ME content. Higher in vitro gas production, OMD and ME content is found in Albizia procera grown in wet season than of dry season. There is significant correlation between total phenolic compounds and in vitro gas production. It is appeared that tannins have effects on reduction of feed values that can be improved by amelioration process which would increase the utilization of Albizia procera foliage.

Phytochemical and Biological Investigations of Calotropis Procera Md. Zakaria Faruki, A. K. M. Mofasser Hossain, Mahfujur Rahman, 2019-04

Biocontrol of Mosquito Larvae Using Calotropis Procera Mohammed Azmathullah, Asrar Sheriff, Sultan Mohideen, 2013 Mosquitoes are one of the most important insect pests that affect the health and well being of humans worldwide. They are vectors for malaria, filaria, Chikungunya and dengue which are associated with high mortality and morbidity in Asian and African countries. Use of insecticides have lead to resurgence, adverse environmental effects and negative impact on human health. Biocontrol of mosquitoes is an environmentally friendly option and involves the use of biologically active plant extracts and other measures for their effective control. Extracts from Calotropis procera are reported to be effective against mosquito larvae and known to contain various phytochemicals. Biocontrol of mosquito larvae using C. procera extracts would hence be an effective option in pest control programmes particularly as an useful Integrated Pest Management technique in conjunction with other biocontrol agents.

Standardized Nursery Technique of Albizia Procera (Roxb.) Benth. Gopal Shukla,Sumit Chakravarty,2012-05 Albizia procera found in sub-Himalayan tract and Himalayan valleys grows up to an elevation of about 1,200 m in the Indian sub-continent. It has a great potential to be incorporated under social forestry programs due to its multipurpose use. However, the use of this species in plantation and in agroforestry system is not gaining popularity because of unavailability of quality planting stock. Seeds of Albizia species are exogenously dormant due to impermeable seed coat or pericarp to water which is responsible for low and irregular germination resulting in to low quality uneven stock. The identification of suitable dormancy breaking treatment holds great promise in the production of evenly grown nursery. The present volume is a dissertation work of the first author Gopal Shukla at master s level submitted to Uttar Banga Krishi Viswavidyalaya (UBKV), Pundibari, Cooch Behar West Bengal (India) under the guidance of the second author Dr Sumit Chakravarty, Assistant Professor, UBKV Cooch Behar. Presently, Dr Shukla is working as a Research Associate at Indian Council of Agricultural Research (ICAR) Research Center, Ranchi (Jharkhand) India.
