Enteric Viruses in Aquatic Environments Eiji Haramoto, Masaaki Kitajima, 2020-04-08 This Special Issue contains one review and five original articles, all of which address cutting-edge research in the field of water and environmental virology. The review article by Gerba and Betancourt summarizes the current status and future needs for the development of virus detection methods in water reuse systems, especially focusing on methods to assess the infectivity of enteric viruses. Original papers cover a variety of research topics, such as an environmental monitoring survey of group A rotaviruses in sewage and oysters in Japan, the occurrence and genetic diversity of noroviruses and rotaviruses in a wastewater reclamation system in China, the detection of viruses and their indicators in tanker water and its sources in Nepal, integrated culture next-generation sequencing to identify the diversity of F-specific RNA coliphages in wastewater, and the development of a portable collection and detection method for viruses from ambient air and its application to a wastewater treatment plant.

Virus Culture Alan Cann, 1999-07-29 Virus Culture: A Practical Approach provides a broad treatment of the principles and practice of virus culture and will be of interest to all those, whether in academic, industrial, or clinical research, involved in virus culture. The first chapter is an overview of cell culture techniques essential for virologists. Other techniques then covered are isolating, identifying, concentrating, and purifying viruses. Electron Microscopy as applied to virology is also explained. Chapter 6 is about creating virus vaccines and chapters 7 and 8 cover antiserum production, monoclonal antibodies and antiviral drug testing. The final chapter describes the methods used to study plant viruses.

The Removal of Metals and Viruses in Advanced Wastewater Treatment Sequences Steven E. Esmond, 1980

Removal and Inactivation of Waterborne Viruses Using Zerovalent Iron Liping Zhang, 2008 Waterborne viruses are of great concern regarding drinking water safety because they are not always effectively removed by water treatment processes such as filtration and chlorination. Iron (oxyhydr)oxides are known to remove viruses from water, which suggests the potential of using zerovalent iron (ZVI) as a precursor of iron oxides to remove waterborne viruses. In this study, the mechanisms for virus removal and inactivation by ZVI and effect of dissolved organic matter (DOM) on the removal of viruses by ZVI were investigated through batch and column experiments using two bacteriophages, [straight phi]X174 and MS2, as model viruses. Batch experimental results indicated that removal of viruses from water by ZVI under anaerobic conditions was achieved through interactions of viruses with iron corrosion products, including aqueous Fe(II) and magnetite. Aqueous Fe(II) inactivated [straight phi]X174 but had no effect on MS2. Magnetite removed both viruses, where the removal of MS2 was mainly via reversible sorption, and for [straight phi]X174 the removal was due to both inactivation (or irreversible sorption) and reversible sorption. Column experimental results showed that DOM decreased virus removal by ZVI and that this effect was much more significant at 2.41 ppm dissolved organic carbon (DOC) compared to 0.34 ppm DOC. Competitive adsorption of DOM for the same adsorbing sites of iron corrosion products and DOM-facilitated virus transport are likely mechanisms responsible for the decreased virus removal observed in this study. Results from this study suggest that removal and inactivation of viruses by ZVI occur through multiple mechanisms involving different iron species, such as Fe(II) and magnetite. Different viruses may interact with iron species differently and hence are susceptible to inactivation to different extents. When ZVI is applied as a medium to treat viruses in water, pretreatment of DOM needs to be conducted to minimize its adverse effect on virus removal efficiency of ZVI.
