Decoy Joanna Steenen, Hannah Steenbock, Fighting for freedom on Franssisi Four - Hannah Steenbock writing as Joanna Steenen This is NOT your classic SF tale with spaceships, laser battles and air locks. It takes place on one planet, and only that one, and there is time spent at the hunter/gatherer level of technology. It's NOT Romance, although it involves plenty of explicit bed scenes and eventually, love between humans and aliens (someone called it polyamory, in fact). It is EPIC in scope, if not in cast. It takes the hero, Zell, from a fairly primitive life in the Wilderness to a stark prison cell where he is expected to demonstrate his prowess as a human male. It lays out how he first builds friendship and then an alliance that will not just change his life but also that of his alien friends. It chronicles their many adventures together. This is a series that explores aspects of morality in many, many ways. What is acceptable, what works, what is categorically wrong? Lots of answers to that, in many different layers of society. Lots of cruelty and lots of caring, lots of heartache, and lots of daring... Also what happens if people change their minds and defy tradition? What if people try out something new and go against long-held beliefs? Pushback happens, of course, even as something new arises, as beliefs and convictions and traditions change... The tale begins here, with Decoy. Best reading order: Decoy Captive
