Defence Planning V. P. Malik,Vinod Anand,2006 It is generally accepted that there has been general neglect of matters defence in India. This book is very timely and it critically examines very comprehensively the issues involved in defence planning process. The book contains the chapters with commentaries by renowned defence professionals including two former Chiefs. An effective guidance on national security and defence policy objectives is fundamental to defence planning. The volume brings out in detail the inadequacies in our planning process. There is a lack of cohesive national security strategy and defence policy and inadequate coordination of defence planning and economic development. In the absence of CDS there is a lack of inter-Services prioritization. The volume also highlights the adhocism in the planning process. This volume is a must read for defence analysts, scholars, practitioners of statecraft and those dealing with defence planning, security and strategic issues.
