Earth Grab Diana Bronson,2011-10-27 Exploiting the general public's growing concerns about the ecological and climate crisis, some corporations are proposing quick fixes that threaten to wreak havoc on our planet. This book exposes how a biomass economy, based on using gene technologies to reprogram living organisms, will devastate our ecosystems as well as the human populations of the southern hemisphere by accelerating the wave of land grabs already common in Africa, Asia, and Latin America. Well-researched and groundbreaking, this analysis explores a number of interrelated topics vis-a-vis the uses of bio- and nano-technologies.

Global Biomass Burning Joel S. Levine,1991 This comprehensive volume is the first to consider biomass burning as a global phenomenon and to assess its impact on the atmosphere, on climate, and on the biosphere itself.

Aquatic Toxicity from In-situ Oil Burning E.V.S. Consultants,Environmental Technology Centre (Canada). Emergencies Science Division,1995 One component study of the Newfoundland Oil Burn Experiment, conducted offshore in August 1993, was developed to determine the potential toxic effects to aquatic organisms that could result from in-situ burning of oil spills and how these effects compare to those from unburned oil. This paper presents results of studies comparing the chemistry and toxicity of background samples, pre-burn samples, and post-burn samples. The chemical analyses included identification of 24 polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons and determining total petroleum hydrocarbons. The toxicity tests conducted on laboratory-generated samples included the echinoderm sperm cell test, the echinoderm larvae test, the echinoderm cytogenetics test, the bivalve larvae test, and the inland silverside juvenile fish test. The same suite of tests, excluding the cytogenetics test, was conducted on the field-burn samples. The overall results indicate whether the potential for toxicity should be a factor preventing the use of in-situ burning.

Motor City Green Joseph S. Cialdella,2020-03-03 Winner, 2021 CCL J. B. Jackson Book Prize Motor City Green is a history of green spaces in metropolitan Detroit from the late nineteenth- to early twenty-first century. The book focuses primarily on the history of gardens and parks in the city of Detroit and its suburbs in southeast Michigan. Cialdella argues Detroit residents used green space to address problems created by the city's industrial rise and decline, and racial segregation and economic inequality. As the city's social landscape became increasingly uncontrollable, Detroiters turned to parks, gardens, yards, and other outdoor spaces to relieve the negative social and environmental consequences of industrial capitalism. Motor City Green looks to the past to demonstrate how today's urban gardens in Detroit evolved from, but are also distinct from, other urban gardens and green spaces in the city's past.
