Flight Investigation of Wing-gun Fairings on a Fighter Type Airplane J. M. Nissen,M. D. White,1941 Summary: Flight tests were conducted on a Navy fighter airplane to determine methods for fairing the wing-gun installation so as to retain the maximum lift of the clean wing insofar as possible. The unfaired-gun installation increased the stalling speed over that of the clean wing by approximately 5 knots with flaps down, power off and by approximately 3 knots with flaps down, power on. Two arrangements of fairings were developed that restored the lift of the wing. Once arrangement consisted of engine cowl-type fairings for both projecting and submerged guns. This arrangement provided an annular opening between the gun barrel and the fairing lip for cooling the guns. The flush arrangement consisted of the engine cowl-type fairings for the projecting guns and faired wing openings for the submerged guns. Successful operation of this latter type of fairing, however, required that no air be admitted around the submerged guns. All arrangements of fairings as well as the unfaired guns improved the stalling characteristics of the airplane as compared with the clean-wing condition. It also appeared that the gun-fairing arrangements eliminated the ground-looping tendencies of the airplane that were attributed to wing stalling. This was evidenced by a series of landings made with the wing guns faired and the small tail wheel installed in which no ground-looping tendencies were noted. On the basis of data from the full-scale wind tunnel, it appears that no reduction in top speed need be anticipated with the four projecting fairings ventilated for cooling as compared with the unfaired gun condition. With the combination of projecting fairings and faired wing openings with no air admitted, the top speed may actually be increased 3 miles per hour as compared with the unfaired gun condition.
