Research Paper (undergraduate) from the year 2011 in the subject Politics - Political Systems - Germany, grade: 1,0, University of applied sciences, Düsseldorf, course: Economics - MBA, Master of Business Administration, language: English, abstract: This paper surveys the situation of the German pension system after a sequence of reforms which started as a fully funded system implemented by Bismarck during the 1880s, with a mandatory retirement age of 70 years when male life expectancy at birth was less than 45 years. Today, life expectancy for men is more than 80 years. After a long and arduous debate in the German Bundestag, agreements on a comprehensive pension reform resulted in the pension reform of 1957, which mainly established changes such as the normal retirement age at

65, the retirement at the age of 60 for elderly unemployed, the retirement for women at the age of 60 and, at last, the introduction of dynamic benefits indexed to gross wages which had an immediate impact on the economic wellness of current retirees. Thereafter, the 1972 reform made the German pension system one of the most generous of the world, as it mainly opened the public pension insurance system to all workers with generous terms for back-payment of contributions and eased the terms and conditions for early retirement by the implementation of the so-called 'flexible retirement', as discussed in chapter 1 of this paper. The following pension reforms discussed in this paper are the Riester reform of 2001 with the following main objectives: the sustainability of contribution rates in order to secure the long-term stability of pension levels and the spread of supplementary private pension savings, and continuing with the efforts of the Rürup commission which culminated in the Rürup reform of 2004 which the objective to stabilize contribution rates while at the same time ensuring appropriate future pension levels. Based on the above, it can be concluded that on the whole the sequence o

Old Age Pensions and the Aged Poor; a Proposal Charles Booth, 2013-09 This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1899 edition. Excerpt: ...reference, only to pronounce them financially impossible. I do not think that either the Royal Commission or the Committee condemned the plan of general endowment in principle. On the contrary, they sweetened their rejection of this scheme with kind and even complimentary phrases as to its logical perfection. But at the same time they no doubt regarded any such proposal as quite out of the range of practical politics. It is, however, not too much to say that while the demand for pensions remains in full strength, it is the non-contributory schemes that now hold the field. The stones which the builders rejected bid fair to become the corner stones of the new building if there is to be any building at all. It is thus incumbent upon those who advocate my principles to show how they might be put in practice, and what now follows is intended as an effort in this direction. The most desirable age for a State pension is put by various authorities at 60, 65, 70, and 75. If we consider solely the usual working powers of men, 60 is now late enough in most manual industries, but some employments press less hardly, and in most cases the industrial breakdown precedes the financial breakdown by several years, so that we find 65 to be the age at which pauperism increases by leaps and bounds, and thus this age has been commonly chosen as representing the time when strength is gone and money spent and--pensions--are most excellent. But nevertheless, for reasons which I shall by-and-by give, the age of 70 is the basis of my scheme. It would be provided that every one should, on attaining 70 years of age, be entitled to a pension of 7s a week for the remainder of life. Aliens would be excluded, and there are no doubt other exceptions to be made, but with...
