Stories of the Gorilla Country Paul Belloni Du Chaillu,1882

Stories of the Gorilla Country Paul Du Chaillu,James Zimmerhoff,2017-07-16 Stories of the Gorilla Country I had passed several years on the African Coast before I began the explorations recorded in my first book. In those years I hunted, traded with the natives, and made collections in natural history. In such a wild country as Africa one does not go far without adventures. The traveller necessarily sees what is strange and wonderful, for everything is strange. In this book I have attempted to relate some of the incidents of life in Africa for the reading of young folks. In doing this I have kept no chronological order, but have selected incidents and adventures here and there as they seem to be fitted for my purpose. I have noticed that most intelligent boys like to read about the habits of wild animals, and the manners and way of life of savage men; and of such matters this book is composed. In it I have entered into more minute details concerning the life of the native inhabitants than I could in my other books, and have shown how the people build their houses, what are their amusements, how they hunt, fish, eat, travel, and live. Whenever I am at a friend's house the children ask me to tell them something about Africa. I like children, and in this book have written especially for them. I hope to interest many who are yet too young to read my larger works.

Stories of the Gorilla Country Paul Du Chaillu, 2015-07-11 Excerpt from Stories of the Gorilla Country: Narrated for Young People My dear young folks, - My publishers, thinking that you would like to hear of Friend Paul, have just published specially for you this new edition of his travels in Africa in five little volumes - Stories of the Gorilla Country, Wild Life Under the Equator, Lost in the Jungle, My Apingi Kingdom (for the Apingi people made Friend Paul their king), and The Country of the Dwarfs. When Friend Paul returned to New York he found the young folks his devoted friends; they believed in him and his books. They believed in the great forest and jungle where he spent five years. They believed in the horrid gorilla, and in the encounters he had with that huge monster; they believed, too, in the other apes that he had discovered, the Nshiego Mbouwe, the Kooloo-kamba, and Nshiego Nkengo. Some of them saw the great gorillas and the other apes at the famous publishing house in Franklin Square. They believed in dear little Tommy, and Fighting Joe; also in the wonderful animals, insects, and snakes Friend Paul described. They believed in all the tribes of wild men with whom he had lived, and who were friends of his; in the cannibals; and in the dwarfs. With him they loved King Ranpano, Quengueza, and Obindji, and also his hunters, Igala, Fasiko, Niamkala, Malaouen, Kerlaouen, and others.
