Charles E. Heller, William A. Stofft

Understanding Commanders' Information Needs

James P. Kahan, Duane Robert Worley, Cathleen Stasz, 1989
This report discusses the information needs of commanders of higher-echelon Army units. The authors identified three different modes of command-post-level communication--pipeline, alarm, and tree. Each mode is indicative of a different communication relationship between a commander and his staff, and each places a different demand on the command-and-control operating system. To fulfill commanders' information needs, the authors recommend a number of education and training measures: institutionalize back briefing, teach process as well as procedures, and train unit command staffs to share images. As for the design of information systems, they recommend that the Army identify means of more direct image sharing, build a hybrid information system, and establish an end-user to end-user communications orientation.

America's First Battles, 1776-1965 Charles E. Heller, William A. Stofft, 1986-12-16 This volume, a collection of eleven original essays by many of the foremost U.S. military historians, focuses on the transition of the Army from parade ground to battleground in each of nine wars the United States has fought. Through careful analysis of organization, training, and tactical doctrine, each essay seeks to explain the strengths and weaknesses evidenced by the outcome of the first significant engagement or campaign of the war. The concluding essay sets out to synthesize the findings and to discover whether or not American first battles manifest a characteristic rhythm. America's First Battles provides a novel and intellectually challenging view of how America has prepared for war and how operations and tactics have changed over time. The thrust of the book--the emphasis on operational history--is at the forefront of scholarly activity in military history.
