Point of Sale Daniel Herbert, Derek Johnson, 2019-12-13 Point of Sale offers the first significant attempt to center media retail as a vital component in the study of popular culture. It brings together fifteen essays by top media scholars with their fingers on the pulse of both the changes that foreground retail in a digital age and the history that has made retail a fundamental part of the culture industries. The book reveals why retail matters as a site of transactional significance to industries as well as a crucial locus of meaning and interactional participation for consumers. In addition to examining how industries connect books, DVDs, video games, lifestyle products, toys, and more to consumers, it also interrogates the changes in media circulation driven by the collision of digital platforms with existing retail institutions. By grappling with the contexts in which we buy media, Point of Sale uncovers the underlying tensions that define the contemporary culture industries.

The P.O.S. Decision Cameron Thomas, Lu Zhang, JaeMin Cha, Jeffrey Beck, 2018 This case study examines the issue of Point of Sale (POS) system adoption and implementation in the context of two independent full service restaurants in Northeast Ohio. The main focus is on the restaurant company Ray's Place, which has locations in Fairlawn and Kent, Ohio. Ray's Place Fairlawn (opened in 2014) adopted a POS system prior to opening. However, some of the beneficial POS data have not been regularly tracked. Ray's Place Kent (Est. 1937) has historically, and still currently utilizes a manual guest check system. The owner and senior management team are now facing the difficult decision of whether Ray's Place Kent should adopt a similar POS system as the one installed at Ray's Place Fairlawn or continue with manual operation.

Point of sale credits from a consumer's perspective Vera Metzen, 2011-03-08 Bachelor Thesis from the year 2009 in the subject Business economics - Miscellaneous, grade: 1,4, Heidelberg International Business Academy, language: English, abstract: Being a traditional emergency credit for the poorer members of society for a long time, most people thought that POS credits were

'unsolid' and thus did not use it. Nowadays, this situation has changed for a variety of reasons and several authors have under-taken research on the subject in general or from a retailer's perspective. This piece of work focuses on the consumer's perspective of POS credits and shows that several factors, such as age, discretionary income and social position determine a person's perception and usage pattern of the POS credit. In order to identify these relationships the author has undertaken primary and secondary research. The knowledge of authors who have previously written on the subject has been used to design a questionnaire that allows for a considerable analysis of the above mentioned relationships. For primary research 100 anonymous people have been questioned in a shopping centre in Heidelberg, Germany using an interview administered quantitative questionnaire. Most of the results are in line with the findings of other authors. However, primary research shows that society as a whole still believes that a POS credit is an emergency credit and that most people's perception of the credit is not as favourable as it is often assumed. Moreover, specific reasons for a positive or negative perception are strongly related to a person's age rather than to social position. Most of users of this financing tool seem to use it for acquiring non-necessary prestigious items. The estimated price of the item rises with the person's age and income. Main motives for using the credit instead of a bank loan could not be identified due to the sample's size. However, primary research implies that using POS credits might often be subject to previous friends' experience.
