Women of Evin: Ward 209 Jila Baniyaghoob, 2013-04-15 I said, You call a peaceful gathering radical? In your opinion, I'm a radical because I came out to cover a peaceful protest as a journalist?! Of course, even if I was not a journalist and I participated as an ordinary citizen, I still wouldn't be a radical. I'm not against women's demands, but the country is in a very critical situation. Is it right to take to the streets, demonstrate, and threaten the country from within when the country is facing external threats? I replied, My country, its security, and its territorial integrity are all important to me as well. But why do you think a peaceful demonstration, with purely civic demands, endangers the country's security? These demands have been made for more than a hundred years, and they are not related to a particular political system. Does the fact that women are demanding legal equality endanger national security?! What's your definition of security anyway?! I have the exact opposite point of view. You not letting women hold a peaceful rally will ultimately lead to disintegration of the society and even the state. Don't you think the more you close down the society, the more you have led it towards disintegration?

209 Mara Torres Gonzalez, 2022-08-19 On September 20, 2017, Hurricane Maria made landfall in Puerto Rico, while Puerto Ricans were still coping with the aftermath of Hurricane Irma. Ruthless, sustained winds of 155 miles per hour and torrential rain for more than 30 hours, resulted in an island wide blackout and a humanitarian crisis. With unprepared municipal governments, slow federal response, no access to electricity or cell service, Puerto Ricans were kept away from reality and basic necessities like clean water, food and medical care. 4,645 lives lost. Five months after Maria, a quarter of the island still lacked electricity. Approximately 130,000 Puerto Ricans (U.S. citizens) left Puerto Rico, including Mara and her family. Mara Torres Gonzalez (b.1980, Puerto Rico) tells the story of the resilient, through 209. The merciless winds not only uprooted trees, it uprooted life as we knew it. Mara shifted her fear and uncertainty and started documenting the aftermath of Maria on September 21, 2017. Throughout the island, she was able to document not only the catastrophe and humanitarian crisis, but the resiliency and the power of community. A few months later, she began working on the 209 series, which had its first exhibit a year later, September 20, 2018. Every piece in 209 has its own story, memory and lived experience. From the first visit to an empty grocery store 15 days after the storm, to politics. 209 tells the story of every Puerto Rican living on the island, every Puerto Rican of the diaspora watching from afar and the Maria diaspora.
