Contaminants in the Subsurface National Research Council,Division on Earth and Life Studies,Water Science and Technology Board,Committee on Source Removal of Contaminants in the Subsurface,2005-04-23 At hundreds of thousands of commercial, industrial, and military sites across the country, subsurface materials including groundwater are contaminated with chemical waste. The last decade has seen growing interest in using aggressive source remediation technologies to remove contaminants from the subsurface, but there is limited understanding of (1) the effectiveness of these technologies and (2) the overall effect of mass removal on groundwater quality. This report reviews the suite of technologies available for source remediation and their ability to reach a variety of cleanup goals, from meeting regulatory standards for groundwater to reducing costs. The report proposes elements of a protocol for accomplishing source remediation that should enable project managers to decide whether and how to pursue source remediation at their sites.

Contaminated Land and Groundwater David N. Lerner,N. R. G. Walton,2007 Contaminated land and groundwater are major environmental issues in all industrial countries and will be of concern throughout the world in the next century. The currently dominant technology of dig and dump is clearly unsustainable but good technical and cost-effective alternatives are unavailable for many problems. This volume draws together a wide range of articles on site investigation, protection and vulnerability, pollutant behaviour on field sites and in the laboratory, and on cleanup feasibility and techniques. They range from a Canadian research-based review of the feasibility of removing volatile organic compounds from groundwater to a history of contaminated land in Portsmouth, and from vulnerability issues due to the Channel Tunnel Rail Link to the economics of decisions on site remediation.
