Challenges in Sun Protection Christian Surber,Uli Osterwalder,2021 In the early 20th century, tanned skin was associated with good health. However, people began to protect themselves against potential overexposure to avoid sunburns. Around 1945, the first sunscreen products became available. In the years to follow, a vast number of different sunscreen filters and frameworks regulating filter substances and preparations, and methods characterizing sunscreen products were developed. The perception regarding the tasks of sunscreen products changed several times - initially it was promoted as a lifestyle product, then as a skin cancer preventive means, and more recently also for anti-aging. Different purposes and the widespread use of these products have led to myriad studies and a wealth of information. In this volume, the editors present a current collection of information analyzing and discussing issues related to sunscreen products and their use. These include challenges regarding the ideal sunscreen product including filter selection and formulation issues, measurement methods, performance characterization, safety, and regulatory issues. Further papers address topics related to the use of sunscreen products in everyday life, in vulnerable cohorts and outdoor workers. Controversial topics such as environmental effects of sunscreen products and the risks and benefits of UV radiation in the context of skin cancer, vitamin D and cardiovascular and metabolic health are also covered.

Handling The Sun And Sunburn Naturally

Monalisa Lorrán, 2021 Apropos very little, here's a useless piece of information with which to baffle your friends, colleagues and family members. You've possibly heard of people being described of as 'posh', meaning that they were somewhat upper-class or in many situations, that for some unfathomable reason, they think they are. Did you ever wonder where the word comes from? Well, the answer is, it's an acronym for 'port out, starboard home', which is a reference to the days of the British empire when the ladies - the real ladies - who were sailing out to India would stay on the port side of the ship whilst they would stick to starboard on the way back. Why? Because they didn't want their perfect milk white skin tainted by any hint of having been in the sun! Imagine that, going to all that effort to avoid even the merest tinge of facial redness because it was considered low-class, something that only the common hoi-polloi would ever be subjected to or even contemplate! How times change. From the mid-1990's onwards, most people couldn't wait to get away from it all so they could disrobe on the beach before subjecting their body to the seemingly warming, calming ministrations of a blazing sun in a clear blue sky. The cost of air travel fell so that overseas vacations became a genuine possibility for millions of people for the very first time and, boy, did they take advantage of that fact. People who had never before travelled much further than the family car would take them were now able to fly thousands of miles to chase the sun. Thus, they were able to expose themselves to the warmth of the sun for the very first time, and they could not believe their luck. Of course, because of their inexperience, most of these people suffered sunburn to a greater or lesser degree at some point, and equally obviously, most of them had very little idea about what to do when they did so. In this guide, I am therefore going to look at three things. Firstly, I am going to expand upon exactly why the 'posh' ladies got it right whereas for most of the second half of the 20th century, we were all getting it very wrong as far as the sun and its potential 'benefits' were concerned. Secondly, I want to bring the whole thing bang up-to-date by looking at what you can do to minimize the dangers represented by the sun when you go on holiday, because there is no doubt that playing on the beach in the sunshine is an essential part of the family holiday for many millions of people all over the world. And of course, the main objective is to focus on natural ways of minimizing the dangers posed by being out in the sun for a lengthy period of time. Thirdly, I am going to highlight natural ways of dealing with the adverse effects of too much exposure to the sun. Although it should be possible with sensible precautions to limit the chances of sunburn happening to you or family members, it is unfortunately a fact that balancing enough sunshine against too much is not always a particularly easy task. This is especially true if you are someone to whom regular exposure to the sun is unusual because you have far less natural ability to withstand the effects of sunshine.

Integrative Pharmacology-based Research on Traditional Medicine: Methodologies, Medical and Pharmacological Applications Hai Yu Xu,Chang-xiao Liu,Yanqiong Zhang,Yan Xu,Takashi Sato,2023-09-19
Integrative Pharmacology can be used to determine the multi-pharmacological effects of traditional medicines such as traditional Chinese medicine (TCM), Kampo, Sa-sang, Ayurveda, etc.). Through qualitative and quantitative pharmacokinetic-pharmacodynamic (PK-PD) correlations among multi-constituents and multi-targets, integrating chemical profiling, ADME/PK processes, molecular network calculation and resulting experimental validation, the use of Integrative Pharmacology has become widespread. The data has provided a novel paradigm to evaluate the druggability of bioactive ingredients of herbs or formulae, to decipher the pharmacological mechanisms of drug action and to screen potentially new indications for approved drugs and previously unidentified adverse events. On this basis, Integrative Pharmacology may offer an effective way to test the potential scientific basis for traditional medicines and to assess what roles of traditional medicine can and cannot play in pharmaceuticals.

Sun-Kissed to Sunburned Chad Bruno,2024-02-03
Overexposure to ultraviolet (UV) light, either naturally from the sun or artificially via tanning beds, causes sunburn. The DNA in your skin cells can be damaged by UV radiation, which can cause a variety of unpleasant side effects. Redness, discomfort, swelling, and even burning of the skin are all common symptoms of sunburn. The severity of a sunburn ranges from mild to severe depending on factors such as the amount of time spent in the sun and the person's natural pigmentation. It's crucial to protect your skin from excessive sun exposure to prevent sunburn, as repeated sunburns can increase the risk of skin damage and skin cancer. Sunscreen, hats, long sleeves, and avoiding outside activities during the sun's peak hours are all ways to protect yourself from the sun's harmful rays. If you do get sunburned, you should treat it by applying cold compresses, moisturizing, and taking over-the-counter pain medicines. The best way to safeguard your skin and overall health when spending time in the sun is to take precautions against being sunburned in the first place.

Ageing is a complex, time-related biological phenomenon that is genetically determined and environmentally modulated. According to even the most pessimistic projections, average lifespan is expected to increase around the world during the next 20 years, significantly raising the number of aged individuals. But increasing life expectancy presents new problems, and industrialized countries are facing a pronounced increase in lifestyle diseases which constitute barriers to healthy ageing. Anti-Ageing Nutrients: Evidence-based Prevention of Age-Associated Diseases is written by a multi-disciplinary group of researchers, all interested in the nutritional modulation of ageing mechanisms. Structured in three parts, Part 1 looks at the cellular modifications that underlie senescence of cells and ageing of the organisms; the effects of energy restriction on cellular and molecular mechanisms and in the whole organism; and the epigenetic modifications associated with ageing. Part 2 includes chapters which discuss the nutritional modulation of age-associated pathologies and the functional decline of organs, with a focus on those primarily affected by chronological ageing. Part 3 summarises the knowledge presented in the previous chapters and considers the best diet pattern for the aged individuals. The book reflects the most recent advances in anti-ageing nutrition and will be a valuable resource for professionals, educators and students in the health, nutritional and food sciences.

Suncream Ryan Richards, 2023-05-08 Whether you like it or not, it's difficult to avoid the sun. That's why everyone pushes for including sunscreen in skin care. But if you end up sunburnt during summer, there are certain things that you should avoid. We all know that sunscreen is one skin care product that shouldn't be ignored. But there are times when you may forget to apply it or to reapply it after a few hours. It can ultimately lead to your skin getting sunburnt. Yes, sunburn makes your skin hot when you touch it. But should you put ice packs on the affected area to cool it down? Avoiding a sunburn is essential for maintaining healthy, radiant skin. By wearing sunscreen, seeking shade, wearing protective clothing, staying hydrated, and being aware of any changes to the skin, you can significantly reduce your risk of sunburn and other sun-related skin damage. If you do experience sunburn, taking steps to alleviate the symptoms and promote healing can help prevent further damage and ensure a faster recovery. Don't hesitate to consult a dermatologist if you have any concerns about your skin or sun exposure.
