Paths of Desire Dominique Browning,2004 When a retaining wall in her suburban New York garden collapsed, House and Garden editor in chief Dominique Browning was forced into action, confronting the essence of suburban gardening with its idiosyncratic ecosystem. A Struggle for Relevance Chris Thompson,2022-06 The book outlines the history of the garden adjacent to Harper's Mansion, an historic house in Berrima in the Southern Highlands of NSW. The National Trust (NSW) acquired the property in 1978 and after renovating the 1838 house passed it and the adjacent two-acres, then a paddock, to Trust members to maintain, create a garden and earn income. The story of the garden tracks its development over the ensuing forty years culminating in its appearance today with a hedge maze, heritage rose beds, camellia walk, orchard and herb garden all contained within broad grass paths. This outcome has been achieved despite the many differences of opinion that exist between the National Trust, garden history experts and volunteers as to how historic integrity can be maintained while earning significant income to ensure the property survives. Significant is the changing attitudes of the National Trust to developing the curtilage around its historic buildings and its recognition that the interpretation of a space can reflect more than its heritage.
