Broadcasting in the Malay World Drew O. McDaniel, 1994-01-01 The study considered questions on five broad topics regarding mass communication in the Malay-Indonesian Archipelago: 1. How does broadcasting reflect cultural pluralism, and what role is assumed by media in cultural integration policies? How do policies guard against the unwanted influence of foreign cultures? How have economic and social policies for national development been carried out by radio and television? Some examples: How does Singapore's Speak Mandarin campaign utilize media; how is educational programming provided for in Malaysian broadcasting; and how are radio and television used to mobilize development activities in Indonesian villages? 3. Through what processes are national media policies formulated and implemented? What issues are important in guiding media, and how is mass communication made to conform with national political principles? 4. What are the similarities and contrasts in broadcasting activities among the countries studied? How do organizations go about the business of producing and scheduling programs? 5. How have advances in technology, particularly the introduction of video and satellites, shaped media policy, programs, and broadcast audiences?

Mandarin Spread in Malaysia (UM Press) Wang Xiaomei, This book is the first of its kind on Mandarin spread in Malaysia. The author investigated the language situation in the Chinese community in Johor and proposed a theoretical framework to analyze language spread. In her proposal, mass media in Mandarin and Chinese education play significant roles in Mandarin spread. Both top-down and bottom spread are found, which is different from the process of English spread elsewhere. With the spread of Mandarin, more and more Chinese abandon Chinese dialects and identify with the pan-Chinese identity. Mandarin spread is a dynamic process, which is triggered by an internal force, i.e. sociolinguistic realignment of the community. In this book, the author compares Johor with Kuala Lumpur and Singapore in terms of their sociolinguistic realignment process. This is a book for sociolinguists, language planners, students of linguistics, school teachers, and general readers

The book shows how religion has evolved through time in the two nations and examines how literature and traditional crafts thrive today. It highlights the performing arts and entertainment, noting how Western culture has influenced and shaped new customs. Housing and architecture, both modern and traditional, are discussed, along with cuisine and fashion. Students can use the book to analyze gender roles and family life. They can also read about the ways in which festivals are celebrated and can compare and contrast leisure activities of Singapore and Malaysia with their own.
