More Than a Music Box Andrew Crisell, 2006 Since the rise of television, much radio consists of 'capsule' news and music formats which are heard as background to other activities. However the medium offers a great deal more. This collection of essays shows how in North America, the United Kingdom, Europe, Australia and the South Pacific, radio continues to provide distinctive forms of content for the individual listener, yet also enables ethnic and cultural groups to maintain their sense of identity. Ranging from radio among the primordial communities to digital broadcasting and the internet, these essays suggest that the benefits and gratifications which radio confers remain unique and irreplaceable in this multi-media age.

The age-old ways in which one could get rid of stress and tension, was getting a massage done, listening to music, cooking something in the kitchen, or just sitting quietly in one corner of the garden, and dreaming of absolutely nothing at all. The last one is of course something a large number of us want to do, if only we had the time to sit and stare! If I tell any of my workaholic friends, to take some time off to contemplate the reticulate venation of a leaf, they are going to give me a look of “what makes you that way, do you think I have the time to look at the venous system of a leaf?” They may have course not remember it, but when they were children, they spend hours and hours, contemplating a butterfly, a daisy, a dandelion, or anything else, which caught their interest, and did not consider that time wasted. How come the moment we grew up, we decided to make stress and strain our portion, forgot how to relax, and decided we would rather live a life on the go, instead of at a turtle pace. Here are 16 easy to do rest and relax tips, which are going to help you get rid of all that stress, strain and tension, which you have welcomed into your life, and which you can try out, depending on your lifestyle and the amount of time you have free, out of your busy schedule. You may not know it, but some people have their own way of relaxing, and starting up the day in a manner which puts them in a frame of mind, which keeps them in a state of contentment, throughout the day. You have to find your own perfect beginning, to the start of the day, yoga, meditation, going for a walk, jogging, find out a routine, which suits you best, and then added to your daily lifestyle. This reminds me of a really cute story told to me, by one of my friends, whose father told him that the first thing he did, when he woke up in the morning was touch his slippers 30 times, first thing in the morning. Well, I do not enjoy these bending exercises, first thing in the morning, but it seemed this oldster enjoyed this sort of activity. And then he gave a sly smile and wink and said, “Then I get out of bed and put them on.” I guess he had been pulling our leg to such a great extent that we needed binoculars to check where our foot was.

Changing Media, Changing China Susan L. Shirk, 2011-01-27 Thirty years ago, the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) made a fateful decision: to allow newspapers, magazines, television, and radio stations to compete in the marketplace instead of being financed exclusively by the government. The political and social implications of that decision are still unfolding as the Chinese government, media, and public adapt to the new information environment. Edited by Susan Shirk, one of America's leading experts on contemporary China, this collection of essays brings together a who's who of experts--Chinese and American--writing about all aspects of the changing media landscape in China. In detailed case studies, the authors describe how the media is reshaping itself from a propaganda mouthpiece into an agent of watchdog journalism, how politicians are reacting to increased scrutiny from the media, and how television, newspapers, magazines, and Web-based news sites navigate the cross-currents between the open marketplace and the CCP censors. China has over 360 million Internet users, more than any other country, and an astounding 162 million bloggers. The growth of Internet access has dramatically increased the information available, the variety and timeliness of the news, and its national and international reach. But China is still far from having a free press. As of 2008, the international NGO Freedom House ranked China 181 worst out of 195 countries in terms of press restrictions, and Chinese journalists have been aptly described as dancing in shackles. The recent controversy over China's censorship of Google highlights the CCP's deep ambivalence toward information freedom. Covering everything from the rise of business media and online public opinion polling to environmental journalism and the effect of media on foreign policy, Changing Media, Changing China reveals how the most populous nation on the planet is reacting to demands for real news.
