Development of Criteria for Design, Placement and Spacing of Rumble Strips Jiwan Das Gupta, 1994 Rumble strips are one of the special geometric features which can be applied to the roadway to alert drivers. A questionnaire survey to various state Departments of Transportation showed that grooved rumble strips are superior in performance to raised ones. Four different grooved design patterns of 3 and 4 in. wide, 1/2 in. deep and tapered or straight edge were developed. These patterns, with a combination of rumble strip pad configurations, were developed for permanent installation at seven different locations. For temporary installation, three raised and three grooved rumble strip pads were installed in advance of a lane drop at two work zone locations on I-75 near Findlay, Ohio.

Strategies for Work Zone Transportation Management Plans Levenson Boodlal, Dileep Garimella, Kevin Chiang, Steven Dale Schrock, Eric John Fitzsimmons, 2020 One of the ways a state department of transportation or other transportation agency can address work zone safety and other impacts is to develop and implement a Transportation Management Plan (TMP). The TRB National Cooperative Highway Research Program's NCHRP Research Report 945: Strategies for Work Zone Transportation Management Plans provides a practitioner-ready guidebook on how to select and implement strategies that improve safety and traffic operations in roadway construction work zones. Supplemental materials to the report include NCHRP Web-Only Document 276: Evaluating Strategies for Work Zone Transportation Management Plans; fact sheets on ramp meter, reversible lane, and truck restrictions; and guidebook appendices.

Work Zone Speed Management John W. Shaw, Madhav V. Chitturi, William Bremer, David Alan Noyce, 2015 This synthesis documents information regarding the current state of practice for work zone speed management. The report compiles data, procedures, techniques, and technical issues related to observing and comparing work zone speeds. The speed management measures have been organized into four categories: engineering, operational, enforcement, and public education and outreach. Information included in this study was acquired through a review of the literature, two surveys of state department of transportation representatives in all states, a compilation of state agency public information campaigns, and follow-up interviews with select survey respondents from several U.S. states and one Canadian province.

Maintenance Services and Surface Weather, 2010-01-01 TRB Transportation Research Record: Journal of the Transportation Research Board, No. 2169 contains 19 papers that explore variable speed limit systems in work zones, the safety of mobile lane closures, temporary rumble strips for short-term work zones, the joint merge in construction zones, real-time measurement of travel time delay in work zones, short-term speed limit devices in work zones, simulation models for assessing the impacts of highway work zone strategies, and estimating operational impacts of freeway work zones on extended facilities. This issue of the TRR also examines alternative displays for speed limits in work zones, assessment of pavement marking visibility, repeatability of retroreflectometer measurements of pavement markings, impact of cold temperature and snowfall on traffic volume, diagnosing road weather conditions with vehicle probe data, improving road weather hazard products with vehicle probe data, integrating the impact of rain into traffic management, the impact of adverse weather on freeway free-flow speed, structural control measures to mitigate avalanche hazards, a small unmanned aircraft for avalanche control, and costs and benefits of tools to maintain winter roads.

Transportation Work-zone Safety and Winter Services, 2001 Transportation Research Record contains the following papers: Quality assurance program for work-zone traffic control (Bryden, JE, and Andrew, LB); Evaluation of supplementary traffic control measures for freeway work-zone approaches (Bernhardt, KLS, Virkler, MR and Shaik, NM); Dynamic late merge-control concept for work zones on rural interstate highways (McCoy, PT and Pesti, G); Evaluation of speed displays and rumble strips at rural-maintenance work zones (Fontaine, MD and Carlson, PJ); Sequential warning-light system for work-zone lane closures (Finley, MD, Ullman, GL and Dudek, CL); Delivering road weather information to the traveling public (Hansen, BG, Martin, PT, Perrin, HJ and Meldrum, D); Use of mobile video data collection equipment to investigate winter weather vehicle speeds (Knapp, KK and Smithson, LD); Factors inducing multivehicular collisions during visibility reduced by snowstorm (Kajiya, Y, Kaneda, Y and Tanji, K).

Improved Work Zone Design Guidelines and Enhanced Model of Travel Delays in Work Zones Helmut T. Zwahlen, 2006 The project focuses on two major issues - the improvement of current work zone design practices and an analysis of vehicle interarrival time (IAT) and speed distributions for the development of a digital computer simulation model for queues and travel delays in work zones. Important considerations in the development of work zone design guidelines include guidance, delineation, and the safety of workers and drivers. A nationwide survey of current work zone best practices was conducted. Based on the review of the existing ODOT guidelines, superior practices available in other states, relevant research, and professional judgment of personnel involved in work zone activities, a set of guidelines for work zone design are proposed. It is anticipated that these research findings will result in the better design of work zones which will minimize traffic delays and improve safety. In the second part of the project trailers, each using two Wavetronix microwave radar units in side-fire mode, were developed to nonintrusively measure traffic. The traffic was measured at six work zones sites with different types of lane configurations at different freeways in Ohio. Traffic on the road was also independently measured using video and radar, and the results compared to records from the trailers to verify that the trailers were measuring the traffic with reasonable accuracy. IAT data of successive vehicles in freeflowing traffic ahead of work zones were analyzed and IAT distributions were generated as a function of the traffic volume for each lane and relationships between traffic volumes and cumulative IAT distributions were established allowing a direct conversion from hourly traffic counts to corresponding cumulative IAT distributions. This conversion method produces fairly accurate cumulative IAT distributions for selected hourly traffic volumes. It was also found that the same cumulative IAT distribution can be used to model the free-flowing traffic at other freeway locations in Ohio, which means that the IAT distributions are portable and scalable and a microscopic digital computer simulation model based on queueing theory may be developed to investigate traffic delays in work zones.

Use of Rumble Strips to Enhance Safety Douglas W. Harwood,1993 This synthesis will be of interest to traffic engineers, highway design engineers, highway maintenance personnel, those responsible for toll plaza design and operation, and others concerned with the operation, safety and design of the roadway environment. Information is presented on the various applications of rumble strips on the traveled way and on highway shoulders. This synthesis describes the state of the practice with respect to placement, operational and safety effects, design, installation, and cost and service life of rumble strips. This report of the Transportation Research Board also discusses the effectiveness of rumble strips in preventing or reducing accidents. It provides information on the potential adverse effects of rumble strips, such as noise, motorist use of opposing lanes to avoid rumble strips, maintenance problems, and concerns of special users such as senior citizens, bikers, and truckers. The need for signing and public information support are also discussed. The synthesis presents several recommendations for future research.
