School Meal Programs Kay E. Brown, 2010 Over the past few years, several food recalls, such as for beef and peanut products, have affected schools. It is especially important that recalls affecting schools be carried out efficiently and effectively because young children have a higher risk of complications from food-borne illnesses. This report determined how federal agencies: (1) notified states and schools about food recalls; (2) advised states and schools about disposal and reimbursement of recalled food; and (3) ensured that recalls were being carried out effectively. To do this, the author interviewed officials from 23 school districts that had experience with at least one of four recent cases involving the safety of food in the school lunch program. Includes recommendations. Illustrations.

FAO/WHO Guide for Developing and Improving National Food Recall Systems ,2012 The purpose of the document is to support countries in establishing and implementing an effective national food recall system to respond to food safety events or emergencies. By drawing on demonstrated best practices, the elements for an effective national food recall system, and the process for establishing, reviewing and/or improving the national food recall system, are described as essential components of a national food control system. The primary target audience comprises the competent authorities and all other national authorities working in the area of food safety. While developed mainly for government agencies, this document may also be useful for other organizations that engage in activities within the area of food safety, including those in the private sector. In recognition of the importance of relying on effective national food control systems in the application of food safety risk analysis during emergencies, this document also addresses the specific needs of countries that are in the process of developing their national food control systems. The document outlines best practice on how to: 1) develop and/or improve, 2) review and 3) implement effective national food recall systems as a key management option in the response to food safety events or emergencies. This document should not be regarded as an additional standard, nor as a model for food recall, but rather as guidance based on a collection of examples of demonstrated good practice provided by experts from various parts of the world.--P. 10.

Food Recalls and Alerts Sonja Koukel,Connie Moyers,2017

Food Safety U.S. Government Accountability Office, 2017-08-10

Numerous outbreaks of foodborne illnesses in past years continue to draw public attention to the safety of the nation's food supply.

Prompt responses from government entities and the food industry can play a vital role in stopping the spread of illnesses and deaths, but unwarranted recalls of food products can trigger serious economic losses for the food industry. In response to congressional direction regarding the FDA Food Safety Modernization Act, GAO (1) examined government entities having the authority to order product recalls and how FDA implements its authority; (2) examined the challenges FDA faces, if any, in advising the public about food recalls or outbreaks of foodborne illness and how the agency has addressed these challenges; and (3) identified mechanisms that may compensate the food industry for erroneously ordered food recalls or erroneous food-related advisories. GAO reviewed documents from FDA and other government entities and FDA data and interviewed stakeholders from the food industry and consumer organizations, government officials, and experts in food safety or food law

Telescoping causes overstatement in recalled food consumption: Evidence from a survey experiment in Ethiopia Abate, Gashaw Tadesse, de Brauw, Alan, Gibson, John, Hirvonen, Kalle, Wolle, Abdulaziz, 2020-11-21 Telescoping errors occur if survey respondents misdate consumption or expenditure episodes by including events from outside the reference period in their recall. Concern about telescoping influenced the design of early Living Standards Measurement Study (LSMS) surveys, which used a two-visit interview format to allow a bounded recall. This design fell out of favor although not for evidence-based reasons. Recent guidelines to harmonize food data collection in low- and middle-income countries by using one-week recall increase the relevance of telescoping because errors spread over a shorter period will loom larger. To provide evidence on telescoping, we conducted a survey experiment in Ethiopia, randomly assigning a balanced sample – either a two-visit bounded recall or a single visit unbounded recall. The average value of reported food consumption is 16 percent higher in the unbounded single visit recall relative to the two-visit bounded recall. Put differently, in this experiment, telescoping errors amount, on average, to an entire extra day worth of consumption being included in the report for the last seven days. Most of the error is explained by difference in reporting of spending on less frequently consumed, protein-rich foods, so apparent diet diversity and dietary quality indicators are likely to be overstated when using unbounded recall.

Pet Food Politics Marion Nestle,2010 Marion Nestle tells the gripping story of how, in early 2007, a few telephone calls about sick cats set off the largest recall of consumer products in U.S. history and an international crisis over the safety of imported goods ranging from food to toothpaste, and toys.
