The Reluctant Rocketman Sarah Kasprowicz, 2013-05 In October, 1970, The Blue Flame rocket car screamed across the Bonneville Salt Flats at 622.407 mph setting the absolute world land speed record. The title held fast for 13 years and remains the fastest American-built car in history. Ray Dausman designed the rocket engine for The Blue Flame. Why wasn't he present when The Blue Flame set the world record? Why didn't the car achieve 1,000 mph as he designed it to do? Ray's story unfolds with humorous observations of what it was like to be a fish out of water in the racing world. The reader has a front row seat for this wrestling match between regret and perspective of achievement. Sarah, Ray's daughter, shares his story in this memoir of a man with a passion for rockets and new ideas. The Reluctant Rocketman introduces the reader to a boy with a thirst for new adventures who develops a passion for rockets as he reaches adulthood with an even greater appreciation for new ideas. The Blue Flame project is the common thread throughout these chapters which shed light on the life of a self-taught rocket designer who had to decide if the price of invention was worth it after all.

Rocket Summer Chip Street,2012-11-11 ...a real page-turner ... riveting and profound - Binghamton Children's Books Examiner This might be the dumbest thing they've ever done. Lacey Patterson just made an exciting - and dangerous - discovery. She's found an old crate filled with surplus military rockets. Now, she could do the right thing, like telling her dad... Or she could do the fun thing, and talk her friends Kenny and Charlie into building a rocket-powered car on the outskirts of town. It's not like anybody pays any attention to what they're up to. Her dad is still mourning her mom's passing after three years, so he's splitting his time between working and sitting alone in a dark house. And Kenny's old man pretty much ignores him and his sister Darlene, unless they forget to feed the chickens... even then all they get is a whack and a bruise. That's why stealing parts from his shop seems like the best and worst part of the plan. Charlie's dad might be their biggest problem... not only is he all attentive and curious and whatnot, he's the Sheriff. So keeping him in the dark is job one. Of course, they've got no skills for building cars, and none of them even has a license. But with enough duct tape and baling wire, and a healthy dose of not-knowing-any-better, they're bent on making this a summer to remember... if they can just stay alive long enough to enjoy it. If you're looking for a YA coming-of-age story that's funny, thrilling, and heart-breaking, this is the one.

Road Rocket Henry Gregor Felsen,2024-02-20 Can a teenager afford a car? Even a cheap old one? Woody Ahern thought he could. He had a job after school, he had saved a little money, and, as he pleaded with his father, the main reason he and the other members of his car club wanted a car was so that they could work on it. It could be an old car, Woody was quick to explain, that we can rebuild and put in good working condition. So Woody got his car-for forty dollars. He named it Sidekick. And from the moment the thirteen-year-old wreck became his very own, Woody lavished on it all his love and devotion, to the exclusion of virtually all the other activities that are a normal part of a teenager's life. But Woody didn't mind. Just wait till he got through with Sidekick! It would be the most beautiful car imaginable. He could see himself driving Sandra to the spring dance. . . No, Woody didn't begrudge Sidekick all his spare time and all the money he was able to scrape up. He didn't even mind the other fellows' snickers when he bragged about Sidekick. He'd show them! There came a time, however, when Woody ran out of money for the tools and spare parts he had to have for his beloved Sidekick. And he almost lost his girl through a misunderstanding that arose over the car. In fact, before Sidekick was safe to drive, Woody had learned a great deal--not only about cars, but also about human relationships and his own goals in life.
