The Top 2% David Papandreas,2019-07-10 The world is changing. The internet has made the world smaller and has brought wonderful advances never before seen in history. It's also created more competition than ever before. Now website owners can find developers to work on their sites anywhere in the world with only a few clicks of the mouse or taps on the smartphone. If you're working as a freelance WordPress developer or considering it, you've probably realized that there is so much more to working with clients than just delivering quality code. To be in the top 2% of freelance WordPress developers, you really need to know and understand how to effectively manage clients. This is something that can take years of trial and error and include many stressful, sometimes depressing days. There are so many brilliant WordPress developers in the world, who understand the coding process, who can solve people's challenges and find creative solutions, but who struggle with the communication part of the business. Make no mistake, being a freelance WordPress developer IS a business. It's a business where you wear all the hats. You're the Founder, CEO and manager, so being able to effectively communicate with clients is imperative and is a skill you need to master. Otherwise, you run the risk of constantly being in a state of feast or famine and becoming over-worked and over-stressed so much so that you no longer enjoy what you're doing. Over the last 8 years, I've been helping people with their WordPress websites. Starting as a consultant talking to clients and business owners, I would take time to understand what challenges they were having and help them find solutions to their challenges. Then I would help them implement those solutions using WordPress. For the last 4 years, I've been working in support at Codeable.io, which is the worlds largest online marketplace for connecting the top 2% of vetted WordPress developers with clients around the world. During this time, I've been helping to support both clients and our developers, who we refer to as experts, and I've personally resolved more than 29,763 conversations. This has given me a unique insight into not only working alongside and helping our developers but also learning from them what works and what doesn't. The developers at Codeable are all really quite amazing. It's a uniquely supportive, encouraging community where they really don't see each other as the competition, but rather as colleagues, peers, and friends. And we do all we can as a company to foster this supportive environment, nurture it, and help it to continue to grow in the right direction. Recently, I transitioned away from heading the support department, to an Expert Advocate role in Codeable. Because of my years of experience and understanding what challenges developers face on a daily basis while working with clients, I'm able to share this insight with our community to help them to reduce stress, earn more money, and have more fun while working. I began to realize that while I'm helping our current community of developers, there is a worldwide community of freelance WordPress developers who could also benefit from my experience. That's why I decided to write this book. To help other developers become better at managing clients and earning more money, all the while reducing stress, and enjoying the process more. I honestly believe that you have what it takes to become a world-class freelance WordPress developer. Someone who embodies what I think of as a WP Dev Hero. And I want to help you become the hero you were destined to be.
